WHERE SHALL THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE BE LOCATED?

tain State not one thousand miles from Illinois, where the two institutions were amalgamated under one head. In this particular institution the funds that were set aside by the Federal Government for agricultural work, were for over ten years used almost exclusively for the engineering department. In fact, it went so far that the Federal Government of the United States threatened the university president that if these funds were not used for agricultural purposes they would be cut off entirely.THE ECONOMY DODGEThe question of the economy of the amalgamated, as against the separate institutions, is all foolishness. For instance, suppose you have a hundred students in an institution and you employ a certain faculty to instruct them. Now, if you double your students, will it not take twice the room to hold them? Will it not take double the class room and laboratories to hold them; and, if your faculty is doing faithful work with a hundred students, then you will have to double your faculty to do as efficient work with two hundred students.President Hamilton, of the Agricultural College of Montana, very carefully looked into this economy phase of the question with the American institutions, comparing the States where amalgamated institutions were found, with those where they were separated. In all cases he compared States with about the same population and same number of students.President Hamilton found that "almost without exception, in states where these institutions are separated it costs less to educate a student than it did in states where the institutions were united."Director Linfield, of the same institution, made the same statement to a car full of men returning from the last Provincial Seed Fair. He said: "It is perfect folly to speak of economy in comparing amalgamated with separation in these institutions."THE EFFICIENCY CRYDid you ever see a man who could successfully run a half dozen different distinct businesses? Then do you expect one man teaching a given science at a university to teach that, and make the proper application for pure science students, medical students and agricultural students. For instance, suppose that we take the man who is to teach bacteriology. At an amalgamated institution that man will have to teach and make application of that subject to medical students, dental students, agronomy students, dairy students, animal feeding students, horticultural students, domestic science students, etc. We say, frankly, no living man can do it. He may do it as a certain chemistry instructor did (a graduate of a university), in preparing a balanced ration for a dairy cow, proposed to feed the poor brute seventy-five pounds of straw per day, because it balanced the ration so beautifully. This is a day of specialties. Men are needed who are qualified to teach the particular science to the student requiring that science, in an intelligent manner.
If you must employ these specialists for the different lines, then why not give them a separate home in which to instruct these different lines, where the whole environment of the place lends force and character to that particular study.We defy any man to teach chemistry or bacteriology successfully to a class composed of medical and agricultural students. Each of these subjects in their dealing with medicine or agriculture are so infinitely deep that no one man can teach them intelligently to a mixed body of students. We may teach general principles of chemistry or bacteriology, but in a day and age of specialization things, to be of any practical application to the particular field that is to be the young man's for life. And the same is true of the whole field of science.This idea of economy and efficiency, in an amalgamated institution, loses its force entirely when looked at in the cold light of reason and common sense. And, in any event, it would be exceedinglypoor policy for any province to adjust its educational system along the lines of economy. Rather discuss the educational system from the standpoint of the most thorough training for the sons and daughters of the province.Some have discussed the question from the standpoint of educating the students of all lines in one institution, so that the student taking agriculture, say, may become somewhat familiar with the work that students are carrying on in other lines, so that a student's education is much broadened. To this we would say, that if the agricultural student will get a smattering of all the lines that bear directly on agriculture, he has sufficient alien of him for a ten-year course, instead of a four-year one. As we have said already, this is a day of specialization in educational matters, and the agricultural student, in the short four years of his college course has no time whatever to dabble in what the law and medical students are studying. And we presume the same thing is true with the law and medical courses.AMALGAMATION WILL DRIVE BOYS FROM AN AGRICULTURAL COURSELet us put this question to any thinking man. If you send your son, say from 15 to 18 years of age, to an amalgamated institution, and the law, medicine, science, English, engineering, mathematical and classics students are continually dubbing him a "hayseed," "clod-hopper," "farmer," etc., how long will he take kindly to his course as an agricultural student. Now, it is no use saying that the other students will not do this, for they will. We know what we are talking about. Our class, after graduating at Guelph, went to Toronto to receive their degrees, and they were subjected to a veritable storm of barnyard calls at the hands of the university students. Of course it did not hurt us one bit, but it shows the attitude of university students towards men taking agriculture.At this present minute this same thing has become so bitter in Minnesota that the agricultural students have carried the matter up to the Board of Regents to have them compel the great body of university students to stop their everlasting drubbing and nagging of the smaller body of agricultural students.Now men say what they like, but students of other courses do look down with a scorn upon agricultural students.CALIFORNIA'S MISTAKECalifornia sees her mistake. The university and agricultural college have been together in the City of Berkeley heretofore. The university however, was not giving the particular kind of practical agriculture that was demanded by the State. For this reason the legislature of 1905 and 1907 appropriated $282,000 for the equipment of an agricultural school, 60 miles from Berkeley, near the town of Davis. Now we wish to note what that money was appropriated for. It was for purchasing land, building barns, stables, etc., purchasing stock, buildings, greenhouses, laboratories, classrooms and dormitories. If the University of California were serving the needs of the State, through her Agricultural Department, then why the need of the expenditure of $282,000 to equip and maintain another agricultural school 60 miles from Berkeley at the town of Davis?
We must surely admit that the Legislature of the State of California was conscious of what it was doing in the expenditure of this vast sum of money.Let us ask any sane man if he thinks the Legislature of California would have appropriated this enormous sum of money if the amalgamated university and agricultural college at Berkeley were serving the end for which it was created.The facts were that the practical agricultural interests of California were suffering through having the agricultural college located in the City of Berkeley in connection with the university, and in order to educate the young men in practical things pertaining to the farm, and also to educate them so that they would go back to the farm, the legislature, backed by the farming communities, of necessity, were compelled to build and equip an institution where the young men could get that which would be use-SPECIAL OFFERS*480 ACRES—Six miles east of Gleichen, 1½ miles from Cluny, con-

WALTER McEAYE AND COMPANY

Wherever the quaint poems of the late Dr. Drummond are known, the name of Walter McEaye is a household word.

Throughout Canada, England and the United States Mr. McEaye is recognized as a foremost delineator.

"The Habitant," the most interesting French Canadian, although less intense in feeling than Mr. McEaye's reading one of the old favorites, such as "Little White," Mr. McEaye is departing somewhat from his former style, and on this tour will be heard in an altogether new field of sketches, plays and humorous impersonations, appearing with Miss Lucy Webling, the dainty English entertainer.

Jerome K. Jerome, author of "Three Men in a Boat," and "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," the greatest international dramatic success of the past century has written a delightful comedy for Mr. McEaye, under the title of "An Anonymous Letter." Mr. McEaye and Miss Webling will appear here on Thursday, March 10, supporting Miss Eileen Maguire, Ireland's sweetest singer of this, her first American tour.

ALFALFA FOR THE IRRIGATED BLOCK

We think there is no doubt that within the next few years great quantities of alfalfa will be grown in the south and south-west.

The fact that Professor Fairchild, at the University, has been working hard in growing alfalfa under irrigation would lead us to believe, inasmuch as our climatic conditions are almost identical with those at Lett, bridge, that we will have the same success with alfalfa as the farmers do in that section. With this object in view, C. P. R. Demonstration Farm at Strathmore have received a large shipment of alfalfa seed from Salt Lake City. This seed has been sent to our provincial officials for examination, and their report is very favorable, indeed.

As an inducement for farmers to experiment with this alfalfa on small acreage, the C. P. R. Demonstration Farm have decided to sell this alfalfa seed at fifteen cents per pound. As an actual fact this seed is the C. P. R. sixteen cents per pound at Salt Lake City and they have paid the freight, over and above that, from Salt Lake City to Strathmore, and are selling it at fifteen cents simply as an inducement to the farmers of the irrigated district to go into alfalfa growing.

It is not the intention that a farmer should plant a large acreage, but rather that a great many farmers should try from one to five acres, simply to find out how the alfalfa will do under their particular conditions. In two weeks, let us say, many farmers as are willing to conduct experiments along this line.

It is also the intention that definite instructions shall be sent out covering the preparation of the soil for alfalfa, etc., so that through this experiment we may learn something about the adaptability of alfalfa to our particular lands.

We wish to distribute this alfalfa seed over as wide an area as possible, and, then, by getting together our farmers unique next winter, we may compare results, and there, by hasten the time when this, the greatest of all fodder crops, may be successfully grown in this neighborhood.

We predict that some will not have as good success as others, but there is no sane reason why in a very short time, alfalfa could not be grown successfully by all. It is merely a matter of getting our land inoculated and the seed well properly prepared, for it is a well known fact that alfalfa does not prosper unless we have the proper grass in the soil, and in this connection it needs a little perseverance and frequently a series of tries before this is accomplished.

We would advise all those who are contemplating joining in this experiment to apply to the undersigned at once, as almost one half of the alfalfa seed has already been placed in small lots, ranging from fifteen to one hundred pounds.

It is required that each one that makes application for seed shall send us with the application one-third of the price per pound (which would be five cents per pound) for all alfalfa that they buy to legalise.

Then, when the seed is delivered, the balance of ten cents per pound will be due and payable.

As we have already said, we are anxious that this alfalfa seed shall be distributed as widely as possible, and we hope with this, as with all other experiments, that the very greatest success may be obtained.

W. J. ROBIE,
Strathmore, Alta.

Supt. C. P. R. Demonstration Farm,

The Rev. T. A. Bowen, of Langdon, will conduct the Methodist Church services on Sunday evening, March 9th. Services will commence at 7:30. The offering will be in behalf of the Methodist Church.

A branch of the Traders Bank has been opened in Kralin, Alta., and we are advised that one will be opened in Mattoon, Ontario, early this month. This will make 100 branches of the Traders Bank in Canada.

A CHARMING ENTERTAINER

Miss Lucy Webling, who will be heard here on an associate artist with Miss Eileen Maguire, is an actress of distinction. She was the original "Little Pantheater" of the English stage, having appeared for 283 nights in this role. Miss Webling has also appeared with the famous Alhambra, with Harry, Edward Terry, Arthur Roberts and other actors of note. Miss Webling will be seen in a number of shiny and interesting comedies with Mr. Walter McEaye, and will appear here on Thursday evening, March 10th.

The BLACK BAG

The match when he raked spiritedly down his thigh flared ruddily. The succeeding paler glow of the lamp threw into relief a heavy beefy mask with shining bosses for cheeks and nose and chin. Through narrow slits two cunning eyes glittered like dull gems. Kirkwood appraised him with attention as one in whose gross carcass was embodied their only hope of unannoyed return to the streets and normal surroundings of their world. The difficulty lay in attracting the man's attention and engaging him without arousing his suspicions or bringing the population about their ears. Though he hesitated long, no favorable opportunity presented itself and in time the job approached the box with the ostensible purpose of mounting and driving off. In this critical situation the American, forced to recognize that boldness must mark his course, took the girl's fate and his own in his hands and, with a quick word to his companion, stepped out of hiding.

The caddy had a foot upon the step when Kirkwood tapped his shoulder.

"My man?"

"Lor, lumme!" cried the fellow in amaze, pivoting on his heel. Cupidity and quick understanding quickened the eyes which in two glances looked Kirkwood up and down. "Shelp me," thickly, "where'd you drop from, guvner?"

"That's my affair," said Kirkwood briskly. "Are you engaged?"

"If you mykes yerself my fare," returned the caddy shrewdly, "I am."

"Ten shillings, then, if you get us out of here in one minute and to—say—Hyde Park Corner in fifteen."

"Ust?" demanded the fellow aggressively.

Kirkwood motioned toward the passageway. "There's a lady with me—there. Quick now!"

Still the man did not move. "Ten bob," he bargained, "an' you runnin' awye with th' stuff of gent's fare?"

Kirkwood tapped his shoulder darter? Come now, guvner. Is it gen-rous. Myke it a quid an'—

"A pound then. Will you hurry?" By way of answer the fellow scrambled hastily up to the box and snatched at the reins. "Ock! Gee-e bup!" he cried sonorously.

The gloom of the tunnel inclosed them briefly as the lights of the Hog-in-the-Pound flashed by and the wheels began to roll more easily. Kirkwood drew back with a sigh of relief.

"Thank God!" he said softly.

The girl had no words. Worried by her silence, solicitous lest the strain ended, she might be on the point of fainting, he let up the shade and lowered the window at her side.

She seemed to have collapsed in her corner. Against the dark upholstery her hair shone like pale gold in the half light. Her eyes were closed, and she held a handkerchief to her lips. The other hand lay limp.

"Miss Calendar!"

She started, and something bulky fell from the seat and thumped heavily on the floor. Kirkwood bent to pick it up and so for the first time was made aware that she had brought with her a small black gladstone bag of considerable weight. As he played it on the forward seat their eyes met.

"I didn't know"—he began.

"It was to get that," she hastened to explain, "that my father sent me—"

"I have been thinking that there is absolutely no way I know of to thank you properly. And I have been wondering," she continued, with unaffected candor, "what you must be thinking of me."

"What should I think of you, Miss Calendar?"

With the air of a weary child she laid her head against the cushions again, face to him, and watched him through lowered lashes, unsmiling.

"You might be thinking that an explanation is due you. Even the way we were brought together was extraordinary. Mr. Kirkwood. You must be very generous, as generous as you have shown yourself brave, not to require some sort of an explanation of me."

"I don't see it that way."

"I do. You have made me like you very much, Mr. Kirkwood."

"I'm glad," he said simply, "very glad if that's the case and presupposing I deserve it. Personally," he laughed, "I seem to myself to have been rather forward."

"No; only kind and a gentleman."

"But—please!" he protested.

"Oh, but I mean it, every word! Why shouldn't I? In a little while, ten minutes, half an hour, we shall have seen the last of each other. Why should I not tell you how I appreciate all that you have unselfishly done for me?"

"If you put it that way, I'm sure I don't know, beyond that it embarrasses me horribly to have you overestimate me. If any courage has been shown this night it is yours. But I'm forgetting again." He thought to divert her. "Where shall I tell the caddy to go this time, Miss Calendar?"

"Craven street, please," said the girl and added house number. "I am to meet my father there with this," indicating the gladstone bag.

CHAPTER VI.

KIRKWOOD thrust head and shoulders out of the window and instructed the caddy accordingly, but his ruse had been ineffectual, as he found when he sat back again. Quite composedly the girl took up the thread of conversation where it had been broken off.

"It's rather hard to keep silence when you've been so good. I don't want you to think me less generous than yourself; but, truly, I can tell you nothing." She sighed a trace resentfully, or so he thought. "There is little enough in this—this wretched affair that I understand myself, and that little I may not tell. I want you to know that."

"I understand, Miss Calendar."

"There's one thing I may say, however. I have done nothing wrong to-night, I believe," she added quickly.

"I've never for an instant questioned that," he returned, with a quail of shame, for what he said was not true. "Thank you."

The four wheeler swung out of Oxford street into Charing Cross road. Kirkwood noted the fact with a feeling of some relief that their ride was to be so short. Like many of his fellow sufferers from "the artistic temperament," he was acutely disconcerted by spoken words of praise and gratitude.

Nor had she fully relieved her mind nor voiced all that perturbed her. "There's one thing more," she said presently—"my father. I—I hope you will think charitably of him."

"Indeed, I've no reason or right to think otherwise."

"I was afraid—afraid his actions might have seemed peculiar tonight."

"There are lots of things I don't understand, Miss Calendar. Some day perhaps it will all clear up—this trouble of yours. At least, one supposes it is trouble of some sort. And then you will tell me the whole story. Won't you?" Kirkwood insisted.

"I'm afraid not," she said, with a smile of shadowed sadness. "We are to say good night in a moment or two, and—it will be goodbye as well. It's unlikely that we shall ever meet again."

"I refuse positively to take such a gloomy view of the case."

She shook her head, laughing with him, but with shy regret. "It's so, none the less. We are leaving London this very night, my father and I—leaving England, for that matter."

"Leaving England?" he echoed. "You're not by any chance bound for America, are you?"

"I can't tell you."

"But you can tell me this—are you booked on the Minneapolis?"

"No."

"Then you're not going to America?"

"No."

"Then you're not going to America?"

"No."

"THE DEAD HAS COME TO LIFE!"

A "FRUIT-A-LIVES" MIRACLE

MRS. JAMES FENWICK

Enterprise, Ont., October 1st, 1908.

"I suffered tortures for seven long years from a Water Tumor. I was forced to take morphine constantly to relieve the awful pains, and I wanted to die to get relief. The doctors gave me up and my friends hourly expected my death. Then I was induced to take 'Fruit-a-lives' and this wonderful fruit medicine has completely cured me. When I appeared on the street again my friends exclaimed 'The dead has come to life.' The cure was a positive miracle." MRS. JAMES FENWICK. 50c a box. 6 for $2.50—or trial box, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-lives Limited, Ottawa.

"No-o. It is a—quite another boat."

"Of course!" he commented vaguely.

"It wouldn't be me to have any sort of luck!"

"Since we are to say goodbye so very soon," suggested Kirkwood, "may I ask a parting favor, Miss Calendar?"

She regarded him with friendly eyes. "You have every right," she affirmed gently.

"Then please to tell me frankly are you going into any further danger?"

"And is that the only boon you crave at my hands, Mr. Kirkwood?"

"Without impertinence?"

"For a little time, waiting for him to conclude his vague phrase, she watched him in an expectant silence. But the man was diffident to a degree. At length, somewhat unconsciously, 'I think not,' she answered. 'No; there will be no danger awaiting me at Mrs. Hallam's. You need not fear for me any more. Thank you.'"

He lifted his brows at the unfamiliar name. "Mrs. Hallam?"

"I am going to her house in Craven street."

"Your father is to meet you there?"

"He promised to."

"But if he shouldn't?"

"Why?" Her eyes clouded. She pursed her lips over the conjectural annoyance. "Why, in that event I suppose it would be very embarrassing. You see, I don't know Mrs. Hallam. I don't know that she expects me unless my father is already there. They are old friends. I could drive round for awhile and come back, I suppose."

"Won't you let me ask if Mr. Calendar is there before you get out, then? I don't like to be dismissed," he laughed, "and, you know, you shouldn't go wandering round all alone."

The cab drew up. Kirkwood put a hand on the door and awaited her will.

"It—it would be very kind. I hate to impose upon you."

He turned the knob and got out. "If you'll wait one moment," he said superfluously as he closed the door.

Pausing only to verify the number, he sprang up the steps and found the bell button.

It was a modest little residence, in nothing more remarkable than its neighbors unless it was for a certain air of extra grooming. The area railing was sleek with fresh black paint. The doorstep looked the better for vigorous stoning. The door itself was immaculate, its brasses shining lustreous against red lacquered woodwork. A soft glow filled the hallway. Overhead the drawing room windows shone with a cozy, warm radiance.

The door opened, framing the figure of a maid sketched broadly in masses of somber black and dead white.

"Can you tell me, is Mr. Calendar here?"

The servant's eyes left his face, looked past him at the waiting cab and returned.

"I'm not sure, sir. If you will please step in."

Kirkwood hesitated briefly, then acceded. The maid closed the door.

"What name shall I say, sir?"

"Mr. Kirkwood."

"If you will please to wait one moment, sir."

He was left in the entry hall, the servant hurrying to the staircase and up. Three minutes elapsed. He was on the point of returning to the girl when the maid reappeared.

"Mrs. Hallam says will you kindly step upstairs, sir."

Disgruntled, he followed her. At the head of the stairs he bowed again and went to his own resources.

Wearied, he deposited himself sulkily in an armchair by the hearth and waited.

From a boudoir on the same floor there came murmurs of two voices, a man's and a woman's. The latter laughed prettily.

"Oh, any time," snorted the American—"any time you're through with your confounded flirtation, Mr. George B. Calendar!"

The voice rose, approaching. "Good night," said the woman gayly. "Farewell, and good luck go with you."

"Thank you. Good night," replied the man, more conservatively. (To be Continued.)

Young Man—"To you think your sister would be sorry to marry and leave you?"

The Terror—"Oh, yes. She said she would have been married long ago if it hadn't been for me."

QUEER QUIT-RENTS.

English Tradition Contains Some Curious Payments.

In connection with English tenures of land or other properties there have been some very curious quit rents or memorial customs, some of which still survive.

On Jan. 16 every year, the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, the Duke of Wellington is bound to present to the sovereign a small flag, which is the annual rent in "petit serjeanty" by which the estate of Stratfieldsay is held of the crown. The flag must be a miniature tricolor or eagle of the Napoleonic army, fringed with gold, with a glazed eagle on the head of the staff, and the number of the year embroidered at the top corner of the flag near the eagle.

The presentation ceremony takes place every year at Windsor Castle, where the flag is placed in the state guard room, over the bust of the great Duke of Wellington, and opposite to the bust of the great Duke of Marlborough, whose living representative must perform corresponding feudal service with a French sovereign flag on Aug. 13, the anniversary of Blenheim, the strict legal theory is that the Duke of Wellington fails to present the flag by twelve o'clock on Waterloo Day he loses the estate.

The Duke of Arrol holds part of his land conditionally on his presenting a pure white rose as his sovereign grant on a visit. The late Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were once his guests at a time when these flowers were out of season, and the duke had some difficulty in obtaining two roses of the description demanded on the occasion.

The rent payable by the Munros of Foulis is a snowball, which must be presented at any time of the year on demand. This condition is not so hard to fulfil as would appear, inasmuch as Ben Wyvis, upon which there is never any lack of snow, is situated on the Foulis lands.

There are many other tributes which the King could exact from his subjects. He could claim the herring pie which were formerly sent every year by the Manor of Carlisle, in Norfolk. If he visits the town of Aylesbury, the inhabitants are bound to present him with three eels if it be winter or two fat green geese if it be summer. It is the duty of the people of Chichester to provide the King with a string for his crossbow whenever he visits them; though what his Majesty would do with such a thing nowadays it is difficult to imagine.

In the thirteenth century one Solomon Attilid got a grant of lands at Kopperton and Atterton, near Dover, on condition that so often as the King should be pleased to cross the sea, the said Solomon or his heirs should be obliged to go with him to hold His Majesty's head if he should be seasick. It would appear that this office of head holding was last performed in the reign of Edward I.

But Hasted, the historian of Kent, says that, in the reign of Henry VI., John Baker held the lands of Coverland and Atterton, in the parish of River, Kent, on the same service.

Every Michaelmas the City of London has to attend before the King's Remembrancer to pay quit rents or two fagots and horse-shoes and nails. The custom dates back to the time when one Walter Le Brun, a farrier, held a plot of land in the Strand, a stipulation of his tenure being that he should annually present the King with six horse-shoes and sixty-one nails.

The Strand, for so the place was called in the reign of Richard II., and all traces of certain lands known as the Moors, in Shropshire, upon which two fagots, severed by a sharp hatchet and afterwards by a blunt instrument, had to be presented, have also disappeared. As time went on the rendering of the tribute devolved upon the Sheriff of the City of London; hence the quaint ceremony is still annually observed.

Certain lands near East Barnet are exempt from tithes, but Sir Thomas Lipton, who owns them, has to be ready when called upon to provide "fagots for the burning of heretics."

The Sponges.

The sponge reproduces its kind mainly by eggs. In each animal are contained both the male and the female elements, and it throws out the ova to be hatched in the water. At first the young are free swimming and afterward they attach themselves to convenient spots and grow.

Not Much of an Actor

A comedian who always affects to be entirely careless of newspaper criticism recently struck from his list of bowing acquaintances a critic noted for his candour. The player met the writer and a friend while crossing London park, exchanged a few words of greeting, and, as he passed on, heard this conversation: "Who was that?" "Oh, that is L., the actor." "He does not look much like an actor off the stage." "Still less when he's on the stage," returned the critic.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER

FOR BABY'S OWN TABLETS

There are thousands of mothers throughout Canada who have no hesitation in saying that the good health enjoyed by their little ones is entirely due to the judicious use of Baby's Own Tablets. And there are many mothers who do not hesitate to say that at a critical period Baby's Own Tablets have saved a baby's life. Such a medicine should always be kept in every home. Mrs. J. A. Fort, Paquetville, N.B., says:—"W. give Baby's Own Tablets all the credit for keeping our little one well. They are an excellent medicine for children."

Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Elderly Gentleman—"Say, did you see a hat that blew off that car?"

Policeman—"Yes, I just threw it back on the car."

Elderly G.—"Great Scott! I just jumped off after it!"

"Did you peel your apple before eating it, Dolly?"

"Yes, mother."

"But where have you put the peel, Dolly?"

"Ch, I ate it first."

More Pole Talk

Sir Leopold McClintock, the Arctic explorer, who died recently, was once giving an account of his experience amid the icefields of the north.

"We certainly would have travelled much farther," he explained, "had not our dogs given out at a critical moment."

"But," exclaimed a lady who had been listening very intently, "I thought that the Eskimo dogs were perfectly tireless creatures."

Sir Leopold's face wore a whimsical gloomy expression as he replied, "I—er—speak in a culinary sense, Miss."
